The College of Public Health was formerly the College of Health Professions and Social Work.

The College of Public Health is a global leader in the discovery, dissemination, and integration of health-related research and practice. We prepare future generations of professionals through an intellectual environment that incorporates interdisciplinary collaboration, critical thinking, and innovation to instill a commitment to ethical practice and lifelong learning. Exemplary research, teaching, and service are informed by our engagement with professional and community, regional, national, and global partners.

The College of Public Health engages in exciting, innovative research and supports talented, committed researchers. Investigations focus on medical interventions, social and behavioral inquiries, and animal and basic science. Inquiries are frequently interdisciplinary, crossing departmental and collegial lines, and draw on resources from across the University. The College's research mission entails:

- increasing faculty productivity in grants and published research;
- encouraging faculty to seek research funds creatively, from such non-governmental sources as corporations and foundations;
- promoting collaborative research;
- developing a research infrastructure supported by best practices and outstanding staff;
- creating students' awareness of faculty research and opportunities for research assistantships;
- providing research opportunities for students; and
- ensuring sufficient support to train faculty, students, administrators, and staff in the uses of new technologies.

The College of Public Health is also committed to excellence in fieldwork and clinical education. We believe that academic preparation must be complemented with a well-designed and mentored real-world experience that transforms classroom and laboratory learning into a dynamic, field-based demonstration of professional attitudes, skills, and abilities. Our students benefit from the College’s location in a metropolitan area filled with diverse and highly regarded health care, human services, and other non-medical agencies promoting health of individuals and communities. Our network of partnering agencies includes top-rated hospitals and rehabilitation centers, wellness clinics, state and federal government agencies, public and private schools, community health and human services agencies, research centers, and private practice offices. Field/clinical education can also begin on campus at clinics and research centers operated by departments in the College of Public Health; through placements with intercollegiate athletics; and at Temple University Hospital.

Ultimately, our diverse population of students and highly recognized faculty seek to enhance the quality of life for all.
