MLTX G518. Introduction to Tax and Legal Reasoning. 1 to 3 Credit Hour.

This course will introduce students to the principles, policies, and structure of the federal income tax system. It covers basic concepts of federal income taxation by studying the Internal Revenue Code, Treasury regulations and sub-regulatory pronouncements, and the judicial opinions, (decisional law) of different courts. Students will examine these authorities in the broader context of the structure of federal government, which informs their relative power and how they interact. Students will develop a foundation of core federal income tax law principles by asking: What is the item? (Does an item of receipt or increase in value constitute income or does an item of expenditure or loss constitute a deduction?) Who is the taxpayer? How is the item of income or deduction characterized? When was the income realized or the deduction allowed? Students will appreciate that the tax Code provides both a source of revenue collection and authority for government to make appropriations to address federal economic and social policy.

MLTX G529. Tax Practice from the In-House Perspective. 1 to 4 Credit Hour.

It is more common than ever for the modern corporation to participate in global markets. The in-house tax practitioner must be comfortable identifying and addressing a broad range of tax issues across the globe. These include indirect taxes, transfer pricing, new international regimes and foreign local practice. The in-house tax practitioner also needs a command of issues at the intersection of tax and business, such as tax operations and tax reporting on financial statements. This course gives students familiarity with concepts and terminology relevant to in-house practice, allowing students to prepare for and assess the desirability of an in-house career or to interact more effectively with in-house practitioners from a position at a law firm, accounting firm or in government.

MLTX G534. State and Local Tax Controversy. 2 to 3 Credit Hours.

This course will examine state and local tax controversies, including audits, administrative and judicial appeals, and important constitutional challenges related to state and local taxes. The first half of the course will focus on managing a state tax audit examination and challenging an audit assessment through the appeals process. Students will analyze common corporate income tax and sales and use tax issues raised in audit examinations. They will also learn the benefits of voluntary disclosure agreements and amnesty programs as options for coming into compliance with state and local tax filing obligations. The second half of the course will focus on constitutional challenges to current state and local tax issues, including issues related to the Commerce Clause, Due Process Clause, Equal Protection Clause, Supremacy Clause and even the First Amendment, which can weave its way into state and local tax cases. This half of the course will also address the prospectivity, retroactivity and remedy that occur once a tax is found to be unconstitutional. Towards the end of the course, students will apply what they have learned throughout the semester in a mock administrative hearing.

Data is a core building block of modern organizations; transforming data into information and knowledge enables firms to improve tax compliance and make better planning choices. In this course, students learn best practices for acquiring, assessing, and analyzing data to solve tax-related problems. Students gain hands-on experience with these concepts through case studies and exercises utilizing various hands-on access to technology. Students will also gain skills in understanding the principles of transaction-oriented data, and how information is stored and retrieved from a data source, apply data mining and business intelligence techniques to solve tax-related problems, and understand and select appropriate data visualization techniques to effectively communicate results.

MLTX G651. Accounting for Income Taxes. 2 to 3 Credit Hours.

Accounting Standards Codification (ASC) 740 is the 2009 codification of Generally Accepted Accounting Principles regarding income taxes. It covers fundamental issues such as how to measure income tax expense each period, how to report the difference between the amount shown as income tax expense on the income statement and the amount of income taxes actually paid based on taxable income, and how to evaluate and reflect tax positions that may or may not be sustained upon examination and subsequent appeal or litigation. This course introduces ASC 740 and provides students with foundational knowledge about preparing and analyzing the financial statement accrual of income taxes considering the applicable accounting standards, tax laws, and financial statement presentation principles for tax expense, deferred taxes, and footnote disclosures. In particular, students will learn about temporary differences, deferred taxes, taxable income, valuation allowance, uncertain tax positions, interim reporting, international tax, and other relevant topics.

MLTX G998. Tax Research and Writing. 1 to 4 Credit Hour.

Tax practice, unlike subjects grounded on common law, proceeds from statute with distinct contributions from the executive and judicial branches, weaving an intricate web. Taxpayers must self-report, and most taxes are self-assessed. Tax has special professional-conduct rules and penalties. These differences affect how practitioners research, interpret, analyze, and write about tax law. This course focuses on those skills, including consideration of research resources and authorities unique to tax law, and modes for interpreting and analyzing tax authorities. While methods for good writing apply whatever is the content one seeks to explain, the course focuses on some formats and difficulties that are particular to tax practices. The work skills and methods covered are applicable to tax practice generally and specialized knowledge of any practice area is not assumed.
