

Graduate Certificate: Data-Driven Decision Making

COLLEGE OF EDUCATION AND HUMAN DEVELOPMENT

Learn more about the graduate certificate in Data-Driven Decision Making.

About the Certificate

Data-driven decision-making refers to the practice of using systematically collected and analyzed information to guide key decisions about policy or practice in business, education, government or other contexts. A growing need exists among organizations of all sorts for employees with knowledge about data-driven decision-making, an important trend in the field and one that complements the expertise of our educational psychology faculty. The graduate certificate program is designed for data users and decision makers from many different kinds of organizations, including schools, colleges, social service groups, nonprofits, government and business.

The success of data-driven decision-making depends on knowing what information to collect, how to collect it, how to analyze it, how to interpret the findings, and how to translate these understandings into subsequent action. Flexible sequencing of courses, potentially flexible modes of course delivery (e.g., face-to-face, hybrid, online), and a culminating paper on a flexible topic allow students in the graduate certificate program to customize training to fit their personal interests.
