Graduate Certificate: Disability Studies

COLLEGE OF EDUCATION AND HUMAN DEVELOPMENT

Learn more about the graduate certificate in Disability Studies.

About the Certificate

Scholars in the field of Disability Studies recognize the necessity of focusing their work on issues of disability within a traditional discipline, as well as enriching their own understandings by acquiring a familiarity with work on disability in other disciplines. In light of this philosophical reasoning, the graduate certificate in Disability Studies:

- pairs well with graduate study in a variety of disciplines, including bioethics, higher education, occupational therapy, public health, public policy, recreational therapy, social work, special education, and speech-language-hearing;
- draws on resources in a broad array of disciplines from the liberal arts and social sciences to the allied health professions; and
- is interdisciplinary and jointly sponsored by the Institute on Disabilities and the College of Education and Human Development.

The Disability Studies graduate certificate offers a course of study that explores disability from historical, cultural and sociopolitical perspectives. Focus is placed on disability within a social and political context, challenging the notion that the statuses and roles of individuals with disability result from physical or psychological aspects of disability. The certificate program provides students with an opportunity to reflect critically on practices and approaches that may be taken for granted in their home disciplines. Particular strengths include constituency-oriented research on disability rights and culture, disability and health, disability social policy, ecological aspects of disablement, social history of disability and ableism, and universal design. Students develop a more accurate understanding and appreciation of people with disabilities and the evolution of their civil rights movement.
