Learn more about the graduate certificate in Professional Health Education.

About the Certificate

The graduate certificate in Professional Health Education provides initial support to faculty teaching in professional education programs in such disciplines as dentistry, medicine, pharmacy and podiatry. It is designed for health-related professional educators, such as dentists, pharmacists, physicians and scientists who have professional credentials for the content they teach, but do not have knowledge regarding teaching and learning theories or case-based instruction methods.

The Professional Health Education graduate certificate offers coursework focused on adult learners, learning theories and case-based instruction. This is provided through an initial, cohort-based executive model in which courses meet either monthly or fully online, with extensive online support via activities, projects, assignments and assessments.
