Since its establishment in 1918, the Fox School of Business and Management at Temple University has built a distinguished tradition of preparing business leaders, professionals, and entrepreneurs for successful careers. Today, it is the largest, most comprehensive business school in the greater Philadelphia region — and among the largest in the world.

Accredited by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB International), the Fox School offers graduate degree programs on campuses throughout the region and around the world. The Fox School is thoroughly committed to providing student-centered education and professional development relevant to today's digital, global economy. That commitment is reflected in:

- Integration of technology into the curriculum and classroom.
- Encouragement of entrepreneurship and innovation in business and education.
- The school's global presence and perspective.
- Strategic alliances with regional and international business communities, particularly within the region's dominant and growth industries in financial services, healthcare, information technology, pharmaceuticals/biotechnology, and tourism and hospitality.

Supporting and enriching the academic programs are research and outreach institutes and centers, including the Advanta Center for Research in Financial Institutions, Center for Healthcare Research and Management, Center for International Business Education and Research, Innovation and Entrepreneurship Institute, Institute for Business and Information Technology, Institute of Global Management Studies, and Small Business Development Center.

With the construction of Alter Hall, an $80 million, state-of-the-art facility, the Fox School embarked on a new era of learning. More than a space with just classrooms and offices, Alter Hall is where students, faculty, and alumni connect and collaborate. Every design element, every piece of technology, and every decision regarding the building was made with the themes of connection and collaboration in mind.
