

Trial Advocacy LLM

BEASLEY SCHOOL OF LAW

About the Program

The LL.M. in Trial Advocacy curriculum integrates the development of theory and theme, persuasive storytelling, extemporaneous speech, and effective use of technology in the courtroom. The program is performance-based, featuring a "learn by doing" approach.

Designed for the practicing attorney, the program's 24 credits are completed in one year from August to April. Classes are scheduled one evening a week for three hours (6:00-9:00 p.m.) for the duration of the program. Weekly classes are conducted online via Zoom for all LL.M. participants. However, students must attend the August Bootcamp and subsequent scheduled performance weekends on Temple's Main campus in Philadelphia.

Students graduate with the LL.M. degree in Trial Advocacy, and those who have already been admitted to a state bar earn 22 substantive CLE credits and two ethics credits.

Temple's LL.M. in Trial Advocacy is an ideal fit for those who aspire to perfect their litigation tactics, remote advocacy and courtroom performance. In addition, this program provides training and an introduction for students who wish to pursue teaching in academia.
